ENDODONTIC - PERIODONTAL RELATIONSHIPS REVISITED

May 18, 2011 Pittsburgh Airport Embassy Suites
550 Cherrington Parkway
Coraopolis, PA 15108

PRESENTER: Calvin D. Torneck, D.D.S., M.S.

SESSION DESCRIPTION

This session will discuss how implants are a useful and effective treatment option for certain dental conditions and how the introduction of them into dentistry has resulted in the extraction of many teeth that might have been successfully retained by more conservative treatment. This is typical of teeth with advanced atypical bone loss of endodontic origin and advanced localized bone loss of periodontal origin.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

- Understand pulp and periodontal anatomy, microanatomy and physiology.
- Appreciate the nature and clinical expression of endodontic and periodontal diseases.
- Understand the interrelationship between infectious diseases of the pulp and periodontal ligament.
- Appreciate the limitation of standard diagnostic techniques in the differential diagnosis of pulp and periodontal disease.
- Be familiar with the use of combined endodontic, surgical and restorative techniques used in conserving teeth with advanced localized periodontal infections.
